So we have had second thoughts and the plan now is to go temporary in October and permanent, on our own rather than as part of the omnibus package, in March. I assume that nothing unrecoverable has been done yet in regards to keeping the temporary diesel rule on the agenda for October, but if it has, let us know.

You would still do the temp rule this month then a separate permanent rule, so no delays. However can't we go to the next EQC for the temp rule and still not have any delays due to how long contracting takes.

We need to decide fast because I believe Stephanie has already pulled the rule or is in the process.

The latter two are suffering from inherent delays from ODOT reprocessing but why add to the burden?

Would it be better to just take this rule on its own to the EQC as a permanent rule in March?

Based on this I suggests we pull the Diesel temporary rule from the EQC meeting this month and propose it for adoption at the next EQC meeting.

Hello,

I was just talking with Jill and she informs me there is a chance the omnibus rule that includes the permanent diesel grant rule may not go to the Commission in March 2014. I would suggest it means we need to reschedule the temporary rule.

The temporary rule is good for only six months. If we filed it in October, it would expire in March 2014 just as the permanent rule was to be adopted as part of the omnibus rule. If the omnibus/permanent rule is delayed it will create a gap in authority. Now I understand the next EQC meeting after March would be June 2014, leaving a 3 month gap where the relevant diesel grant rule would not be in place. This raises a question as to what happens to projects underway during this period.

I understand the next EQC meeting for the temporary rule would be December 2013, which would be sufficient to provide a six month coverage period before the permanent rule is considered in June 2014.

As you decide how to proceed with timing on the omnibus rule and the issue raised there now, consider whether we need to reschedule Commission consideration of the temporary rule.
