The proposed rule change is essentially to correct an error in the original version.

I'd suggest that a finding could be that failure to adopt this change would substantially prejudice the CAGMs and the public by retaining a test method that is inappropriate for the purpose of testing emission control device removal efficiency and which may give results that are incompatible with the intent of the rule.

This looks fine to me. I think you could just adopt these amendments to the current temporary rule, effective only for the term of the temporary rule.

Along with a finding that failure to adopt this change would substantially prejudice the CAGMs and the public—because (I think?) you wouldn't get the information you need (is that right?) or you would cause them significantly more expense and you would get more information than you need (is that right?).

Here is the latest version…..not on SharePoint yet. I'll post it after Paul is done. George addressed Leah's comments. The changes I made need to accepted but I left it in redline/strikeout so you could see it.

Meyer said we have to do the whole staff report again (add the language that George wrote up front) and include the whole set of rules since EQC needs to adopt the whole temporary rule again. I'll do that once I get comments back from you on this document.

I have emailed Stephanie to see what's going on schedule wise….she is out today.

I'll update you when I know more.

Thank you!
Jill

Jill,
No, I don't have redline/strikeout, other than the attached doc. I edited the attached doc to include the one sentence that I added a few days ago, and also responded to both your and Leah's comments.
So, this is the "official" working version.

George,
Do you have a redline/strikeout? I glanced at SharePoint and didn't see it.
Thanks,
Jill

George - this looks really good. Very understandable. I had only one comment.

Paul can you review.

Jill can you also send along the rule amendment in track changes so we can see what we are changing? I thought I knew, but the staff report confused me a bit as to what we are changing.

Thanks!

Just realized this didn't go out yesterday……..sorry!

Just reordered a couple sentences and had a question. Nice job, George!

Hello all,

First draft of a 2-page staff report for correction of temporary rule, for your review.

George
