Maggie,

Yes, I did…..hope you did too, Maggie!

We (rulemaking team) have been checking cross references throughout the whole "proposed rules" document and changing where appropriate. Permit writers/inspectors also send me incorrect cross references as they find them so I'm feeling pretty good about the shape they are in. I really don't think it would add any value to checking them all again.

Thanks for asking,
Jill

Hi Jill—

I hope you had nice Mother's Day.

When Paul reviewed the AQ permitting rule language, he checked references to other regulations in the proposed amendment language, but not in existing unchanged language.

QUESTION: If you or others on your team did not verify non-amended references, would it add value to check all references?

To verify all existing references in all open rules would be a significant effort. Paul has a paralegal or law clerk that could do this and said, "I think that non-substantive reference corrections could be included in the final rules without having to have a particular public comment on them."

Please advise.

Thank you.

Maggie
