Just Jon and I listened in on Jane's conversation with the TMDL managers about changing the class of failure to submit/implement an implementation plan from II to I. I know Zach isn't for changing the class for TMDL plans and Jon didn't get excited about the bacteria issue (I had to prompt him for it).

I don't think there are really any burning issues from either the permit managers or TMDL managers, except WR wants to lower the penalty matrix for < 1 acre parcels that aren't required to have NPDES construction permits. I haven't heard from the stormwater managers about whether they want to add failure to implement other types of stormwater management plans a Class I (right now only erosion and sediment control plans are in the Class I category), but I know Zach isn't excited about.

It seems to me that they are all more interested in revising the guidance.

By the way, I was asked what the base penalties are going to look like after we increase them. I know you mentioned what the legislature did in one of your earlier emails but I wasn't sure what was going to happen. Do we have "new" matrices that I can distribute to managers?

Thanks!

Has anybody responded to you yet with suggestions for changes. I haven't seen anything.
